

"What's 'Gay'?" Asked Mae

Written by Brian McNaught

Illustrations by Dave Woodford

"What's 'gay,'?"

asked Mae

of her cousin Ray.

"It's a way to love," cooed the Morning Dove.

"A way to love.

A way to love."

"That makes sense," said Ray,

whose uncle was gay.

"Uncle Gary and Uncle Barry

are going to marry,

and I'm going to carry

their rings that day."

"Your Uncle Barry.

and your Uncle Gary

are gay?" asked Mae.

"I'd say. I'd say." replied the Blue Jay.

"Who else is gay?" asked Mae.

"Who else might love this way?"

"I can't say," said Ray,

"but the Humming Bird may."

"You're made that way," they heard the Humming

Bird say.

"And not just people like your Uncle Barry, but animals too, like whales, and dogs, and a moose named Larry.

"So, boys and boys play house?"

asked Mae.

"And so can a bunny, a turtle, and a mouse?"

"That's right," said the Robin who was listening in. "I know gay chipmunks, and crickets, and some of my kin." "Is everyone gay, and everything too? Am I gay? Is Ray gay?

And, how about you?"

"I'll answer that," the Cardinal sang.

"You'll more often find a boy loves a girl, whether they're people, or orangutans.

"Girls can love girls.

That's certainly true, and it shouldn't matter to me or to you.

"But, chances are good, if you really must know, most girls play house with boys. It is so."

"And let me say more," the wise Owl knew,

"some creatures play house with boys and girls too.

"It's best not to ask, if someone is gay.

Just let them tell you in their own time and way."

The Magpie knew best, as the others agreed.

"All love is beautiful, with whomever it be."

Brian McNaught is an author of several books, most recently, Grogg is a Frog Without Polliwogs, and The Lincoln Chronicles- Puppy Wisdom for Happy Living. His life's work has been education on lesbian gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer issues through books, DVDs, and personal presentations in schools, churches, and corporations throughout the world. He and his husband of 43 years, Ray Struble, and their Labradoodle, Lincoln, live in Ft. Lauderdale, FL, and in Tupper Lake, NY. www.brianmcnaught.com.

Dave Woodford is an illustrator/fine artist/art teacher in Bristol, CT. His most recent illustrations are in the book, Grogg is a Frog Without Polliwogs, and in the e-book, The Big Watermelon. Dave's art has been featured in The Witness, a publication of the Episcopal Church, and The American Artist, summer watercolor edition, and has been shown at the Living Traditions Galleries in Bristol and Avon, CT.